The Trellis Art Fund has announced the twelve artists making up its 2025 Milestone Grant cohort. Each will receive an unrestricted grant of $100,000, disbursed in two installments over a two-year period. Established in 2024 and open to those living in or eligible to work in the United States, the award is meant to encourage artists in their practice. Several grants are earmarked for artists who are also caregivers to children, seniors, and other family members in need. Trellis will additionally supply the grantees with career-development assistance, including workshops, and in November will host a retreat in upstate New York for 2024 and 2025 Milestone grantees to foster community-building.

“While this year’s grantees vary greatly in their career stage, many mentioned how meaningful the grant is, not only as a financial boost but as affirmation and encouragement during this challenging economic and cultural moment,” said Trellis Art Fund director Emily Davidson in a statement. “We’re excited to see how these funds, and being in community with one another, might impact these grantees over the next two years and beyond.”

To arrive at this year’s cohort, the private art fund invited fifty-six artists and art world professionals to nominate artists to apply for the award, garnering eighty-one submissions from artists working across a variety of media and disciplines. Those making up the original applicant pool represented nineteen states and Puerto Rico, with roughly 72 percent self-identifying as artists of color, and 37 percent as
